About The 2007 Trojan Sexual Health Report Card

Researchers polled student health centers and reviewed their websites to assign a grade point average (GPA) for sexual health resources across 11 separate categories:

- Sexual health awareness programs
- Condom & contraception availability
- HIV testing
- Other Sexually Transmitted Infection (STI) testing
- Student health center hours of operation
- Drop-in vs. appointment-based service
- Navigability and usability of Web-based sexual health information
- Anonymous advice / newspaper columns
- Lecture outreach programs
- Student peer groups
- Sexual assault programs

With a significantly expanded scope including more judging categories, more schools, and broader data collection methods like live health center interviews, Web reviews and student polls, the 2007 Trojan Sexual Health Report Card tells a different story from last year.

One-hundred-thirty-nine colleges and universities were selected to be included in the survey, up from 100 last year with every state represented by at least one school. The schools were chosen for their size and general level of familiarity to the public. Information was gathered over the course of three months – April to June 2007. The students of each school participated in a poll to judge their opinions of their school's student health services regarding matters of sexual health and awareness. Each school's student health center was contacted via telephone and email to participate in a brief poll regarding the center's services. Each school received a score of 1-10 in each of 11 criteria, and then each of the numeric scores was converted into a letter grade, from which a score was calculated for each in the same manner a student's grade point average is computed. Criteria included: Student health center hours of operation, drop-in vs. appointment based service, sexual health awareness programs, contraception availability, HIV testing, other STI testing, anonymous advice / newspaper columns, lecture outreach programs, student peer groups, sexual assault programs and navigability and usability of website. In the event of a tie, schools with the lowest individual category score were ranked below those with higher individual scores. For example, a school with a C as a lowest of the 11 grades would rank above a school with a D or F in one of its categories. In the event of a further tie, the winner was determined by the best score in its web site.
